10 Critical REASONS

for Investing in Gold and Silver Coins under President Trump:

What the Next Four Years Hold

By Adam Crum: Vice President and Chief Market Analyst, Monaco Rare Coins

Love him or hate him, Donald J. Trump is now the President of the United States. Those who voted for him or one of his opponents, especially investors, must now accept his presidency and reevaluate how it will change the U.S. and global economies.

President Trump was elected on the promise to "Make America Great Again." To accomplish that central pledge, President Trump has promised to renegotiate existing trade agreements like NAFTA and TPP as a strategy to bring home jobs lost to trade deals and low currency valuations in China, Asia and South America.

> Among President Trump's other promises are…
>
> Cutting personal and corporate tax rates;
>
> Cutting/repealing estate taxes;
>
> Eliminating large numbers of government regulations which inhibit business;
>
> Maximizing domestic oil, gas, and coal production;
>
> Rebuilding, repairing, and expanding our nation's infrastructure, particularly roads, bridges and public airports;
>
> Building a 2,000+ mile wall on the Mexican border at our southern neighbor's expense;
>
> Restocking our country's military by expanding the U.S. naval fleet, modernizing our nation's air force and bolstering our nuclear deterrent;
>
> Repealing and replacing Obamacare;
>
> Deporting as many as 19 million undocumented persons from the United States;
>
> Policing the Iran Nuclear Treaty;
>
> Getting our NATO allies to pay their fair share for their common defense;
>
> Improving America's relationship with Russia.

President Trump, for better or worse, is going to be an entirely different President than Barrack Obama. That's what the American people wanted and elected.

Instead of a mild-mannered, calm and reassuring college professor, President Trump is a hard charging billionaire businessman who has already proven he's not going to back down from controversy and confrontation.

Initially, as the Trump Administration takes over the reins of government, there are some things investors are counting on -- lower taxes and less regulation. If President Trump is able to come through on this promise, we will likely see the Dow and other stock market indices climb sharply during Trump's first term.

Lower taxes and a favorable regulatory environment would fall to the bottom lines of the vast majority of public and private companies, enhancing opportunities for growth and expansion beyond the relatively weak economic performance we experienced during the Obama Presidency.

Significantly increased infrastructure and military spending, including the construction of the great American Wall on our southern border, should help create a vast number of more jobs… the exact formula of spending and economic policies Trump has promised to "Make America Great Again."

As an investor, however, whether you're thrilled with President Trump or not, you should recognize there is both tremendous opportunity and risk that he represents to the world economy, world financial markets and your investment portfolio. As an investor you need to always focus on not just the potential rewards but also the dangers. In this special report, I will lay out, as promised, 10 Critical Reasons for Investing in Gold and Silver as we enter four years of a Trump Administration.

If you, like me, are a politically conservative investor, some of these risks could act as a huge catalyst for much higher prices for gold and silver.

In fairness to President Trump, many if not all of the risks and critical market forces that could catapult gold and precious metals much higher have existed in one degree or another during the past eight years. In some cases these risks have been around for decades, but some have not...

1. Deporting millions of undocumented persons

Keep in mind the total number of illegal aliens President Trump proposes to deport over the next four years could top 20 million and these people include a large population of the low wage workers here in the United States.

If President Trump makes good on his pledge of deportation, the shortage of basic level manual workers could drive basic wages well over the $15 minimum wage that so many on both sides of the political aisle have been advocating.

Prices of gold and silver have risen sharply in periods of high inflation. Large scale wage pressures represent a significant inflation risk.

2. Some believe an entirely new kind of domestic terrorism is possible

The Boston Globe

DEPORTATIONS TO BEGIN

Markets sink as trade war looms

Many alarmists believe a side effect of President Trump living up to his mass deportation of as many as 20 million illegal aliens by force is the risk of creating an -- armed deportation resistance. Sounds crazy to me, but crazier things have happened.

> The flip-side of living in a free market where anyone can go into a Home Depot, Lowes or even a local hardware store to buy large bags of fertilizer and other makings of high explosive bombs, is of course the danger of disgruntled groups and or individuals who have incredibly easy access to large amounts of components that can be used to make tremendous numbers of deadly powerful terrorist weapons. We will never forget the tragedy of Oklahoma City and Timothy McVey.
>
> While I support President Trump's desire to restore legitimate national borders and tighten immigration into our country, I understand that some have real fears of domestic terrorism. And with today's social media and the lies it perpetrates, it could become a serious problem. We've already seen demonstrations grow to record-breaking numbers due to the rapidly spreading opinions, often baseless opinions, as a result of the power of social media.
>
> It's not hard to imagine a video of perceived violent confrontations by immigration enforcement thought to have gone too far in its work spreading around the world in minutes. These kind of things have happened and will continue to happen, possibly inspiring thousands of illegals to become violent and take up arms.

An active armed underground deportation resistance occurring simultaneously in several regions of the country could weaken the U.S. Dollar and create uncertainty. Investors hate uncertainty. Uncertainty and domestic terrorism on a large scale could weaken the U.S. Dollar; this would create a currency environment that has been very bullish for gold and silver prices in the past.

3. Radical Islamic terrorism

Despite heightened security measures implemented by Homeland Security since the coordinated attacks by al-Qaeda on Sept. 11, 2001, there have been 37 terrorist acts on U.S. soil. While 14 of those terrorist acts did not have fatalities, there were 151 total deaths from 23 attacks, with nearly one-third of the total death count coming from the Orlando nightclub shooting in June alone.

President Trump has sworn to "bomb the hell out of ISIS" and "decimate al-Qaeda" where they currently exist. Our new president is much more emphatic about his determination to not only kill these terrorists, but has repeatedly said he would order U.S. military forces to wipe their families from the face of the earth as well.

If President Trump lives up to his word, some critics believe the war on terrorism will grow much wider and much more violent than it has been. The recent ISIS terror attacks in 17 countries including France, Belgium, Great Britain, Italy, Israel, Russia and Turkey demonstrate we have entered a period where on any given day we could wake up to a nightmare.

Tougher response to this expansion of radical Islamic terror is already taking place. A tougher U.S. president may eventually devastate both ISIS and al-Qaeda, but before that happens, we could witness new 9/11 sized attacks here in the United States and around the world.

Gold and precious metals took off to a new historic high in the years following 9/11. One or more attacks killing thousands likely would be an accelerant for higher precious metals prices again.

4. Big government spending

President Trump proposes a 10-year $1 trillion plan to expand America's infrastructure, sharply increase military spending, all with a major tax cut. The assumption is that these increases in spending coupled with the tax cut will spur growth in the economy and deliver 6% economic growth.

Trump's pending stimulus plan made sense in 2009 when the economy was in freefall, but seven years into a recovery, spending $1 trillion could have some unintended side effects. Fed Chair Janet Yellen cautions against such a spending spree at a time when some believe the economy may not need it.

The promise to bring radical change to U.S. fiscal policy has been reinforced by President Trump's Secretary of Treasury, Steven Mnuchin, who has said recently Americans should expect the "largest tax change since Reagan..."

As a conservative, I hope for the best. Still, cutting taxes in Kansas and Louisiana didn't result in increased net tax revenue as promised by those GOP Governors. It just resulted in bigger debt.

> Trump's proposed spending is reminiscent of the last George W. Bush administration. However, unlike the Bush years that were plagued by recession that helped mute inflation, increased spending from Washington D.C. this time may lead to more growth. But this time, much higher inflation could result.

Again higher inflation is indisputably good news for gold and precious metals investors and speculators. If the U.S. economy sees higher inflation, the value of the U.S. dollar will weaken and investors will flock to gold and precious metals as a hedge against that inflation.

5. President Trump, along with a Republican majority, are likely to reduce much of the regulation brought by Dodd-Frank

While some government oversight and bank regulation is necessary, many business people and financial analysts believe the extreme anti-business oversight of the Obama Administration took advantage of the 2008 collapse and seized the opportunity to pass Dodd-Frank in 2011. Many business leaders, conservative think tanks and most on the right side of the aisle believe it was an extreme overreaction and an overreach of regulation, choking business growth. If President Trump fulfills his campaign promises, then Dodd-Frank regulation will be re-evaluated and likely be diluted or repealed resulting in a return to significantly more robust lending practices. Many financial analysts point to this as a catalyst for economic growth and business investment. We've already seen the initial market reaction, as these differences in philosophy are largely responsible for the Trump Rally we've seen in the Dow since the November elections.

6. China dumping a large portion of its remaining $3 trillion of U.S. Dollar reserves in retaliation to what they may perceive as a hostile Trump administration

President Trump's hostile rhetoric towards China could lead to a further shift by the Chinese Central Bank from U.S. Dollars into gold. China has steadily hinted at its desire for the Yuan, or basket of commodities, to replace the U.S. Dollar and has hinted at its ability to undermine the United States. It has reduced its dollar reserves in the last few years from a peak of $4 trillion.

> While retaliation remains a factor over why China may be dumping U.S. Dollar holdings, it is clearly not the only reason. China's robust economic growth, which was in the double digits for decades, has cooled considerably. Investment in infrastructure, while still high, is not what it was and both government and corporate debt is accelerating. This is another key factor in the exit of capital from China to America in the form of U.S. Dollars. Additionally, with the slow-down in economic growth has come increased concerns and uncertainty.
>
> For months now, both public and private sector buying of gold and gold exchange traded funds has increased significantly in China. By January 18, 2017, according to Bloomberg, three Chinese and European Gold ETFs have seen some of the largest inflows of capital from China in their respective trading histories, taking in over $318 million.
>
> The reasons for this flight to quality are many, and undoubtedly, a declining value in the Chinese Yuan is certainly a factor as the Chinese look to gold as a hedge. But a main determining factor is the uncertainty of new policies toward trade with China by the United States under the new Trump administration. So far, hundreds of millions of dollars have been shifted into gold as an apparent hedge against what is an uncertain future so far.

Ironically, Trump's concern over Chinese currency manipulation could set up the biggest short in the U.S. Dollar in history. If such a scenario was to play out, then being long in gold and silver, as far as I'm concerned, is an absolute must as a hedge against a declining dollar and the possibility of higher inflation. Both economic scenarios could drive gold and silver prices higher and many market analysts believe the stage is being set for new all- time highs.

7. Oil prices could well be heading higher thanks to the birth of a new cartel

OPEC's historic agreement with Russia and other non-OPEC members last month which is already significantly responsible for a rise of 14 percent in the price of crude oil.

This would be good for gold for a few reasons:

- Higher oil prices are likely to boost inflation, which is generally good for gold;
- Higher oil prices can dampen economic growth, and gold can offer an alternative to investors looking for yield;
- Higher oil prices could mean that both Russia and OPEC members will start stockpiling gold.

U.S. oil production, which has been declining, will likely move higher thanks to the Trump Administration. This increase in production may not dampen the price of oil if Russia and Saudi Arabia are willing to continue to trim their production to keep upward pressure on the price of oil.

8. Trade war would guarantee inflation

When the value of currency falls in China or Mexico, so does the value of Chinese and Mexican goods. Each U.S. Dollar suddenly buys more Chinese / Mexican made clothes, cars, air conditioners, steel, toys… you name it. That gives Americans more reason to buy goods from Mexico and China: It's cheaper. But proposed new tariffs would cost U.S. consumers and may not help US manufacturers as intended.

If the Yuan and Peso drop in value, the U.S. Dollar is likely to rise. And a stronger dollar is bad for U.S. exporters, since it effectively raises the prices of their products overseas.

New tariffs threatened against China, Mexico and other countries in Asia and south of the border, could spark an all-out trade war in which other countries impose their own tariffs. That could unglue the world's currency markets and touch off an enormous currency crisis in which all currencies, even the U.S. Dollar, spiral lower as markets react to the worldwide economic disruption.

Frank Holmes, a well-known fund manager and a natural resources and emerging markets expert with U.S. Global Investors, a San Antonio-based boutique investment firm, had $946 million in assets under management and was quoted in September as saying, "Trump's threat of hefty trade sanctions on China for its currency policy could lead to massive inflation in America," which could boost gold demand but hurt oil consumption.

As for President Trump's threat to pull out of "very critical international trade deals like NAFTA (the North American Free Trade Agreement) and levy huge tariffs on Chinese-made goods"...

This could lead to another inflationary period… and could trigger another recession, or it could spur economic growth to President Trump's target of 6% growth in GDP, all of which would put upward pressure on the price of gold and silver.

9. Collapse of the European Union

Europe is STILL an economic mess. It's already led to "Brexit," Great Britain withdrawing from the European Union (EU). Italy's Prime Minister has already called for new elections thanks to its stagnant economy. Spain is an economic basket case and may also break away. Further, the European Banking Crisis hangover continues to threaten the EU. Europe's woes could trigger a new global economic crisis.

> Meanwhile, here in the United States, President Trump floated during last year's presidential campaign the idea that if he became president, the government might try to make a deal with U.S. debt holders for partial repayment of the money that the government owes them.

The New York Times quoted him as saying on CNBC…

"I would borrow, knowing that if the economy crashed, you could make a deal... And if the economy was good, it was good. So, therefore, you can't lose."

Bloomberg added that Trump implied...

"He might use his business skills to reduce America's debt burden by pushing creditors to accept write-downs on their government holdings."

While a prudent use of these tactics can be quite useful in the private sector, it may be an entirely story in the field of politics and the global economy, especially with an economy and obligations the size of that of the United States.

In the world of finance, U.S. treasuries are considered a risk-free asset. This is because they are backed by the government of the world's most important currency.

The U.S. government can raise taxes or print more money if it needs cash to pay its creditors. As a result, the chances of the U.S. government defaulting on its debt have always been considered close to zero.

The idea that U.S. treasuries are risk-free is one of the most dangerous fantasies in finance. Money can be lost even in risk-free T-bills because of inflation and loss of purchasing power.

The reality here is...IF President Trump ever seriously suggests that he views repayment as optional, the entire world financial order would most likely change, and rapidly!

The New York Times said...

"Such remarks by a major presidential candidate have no modern precedent. The United States government is able to borrow money at very low interest rates because Treasury securities are regarded as a safe investment, and any cracks in investor confidence have a long history of costing American taxpayers a lot of money."

The 10th critical reason for investing in a core position gold and silver:

10. History has demonstrated for 5,000 years that gold and silver have always been insurance against the stupidity and greed of politicians and government bureaucrats!

Gold With Muscle

Investors have for decades looked at the strength and fortitude of possessing $20 Gold Saint Gaudens coins as a means to secure their financial security.

What you get owning a fixed-supply gold coin like the $20 Gold Saint Gaudens is ownership of a tangible bullion asset that has more profit potential than just plain bullion and, diversifies a financial portfolio. In other words. gold bullion with added punch and muscle due to fixed supplies.

With gold trading for $1,235 you can buy these $20 Gold Saint Gaudens coins graded and authenticated by the Professional Coin Grading Service (PCGS) for:

Select Uncirculated PCGS MS63................$1,398 each

Choice Uncirculated PCGS MS64...............$1,609 each

Gem Uncirculated PCGS MS65..................$1,980 each

The entire population of both MS63 and MS64 Saint Gaudens $20 gold coins, graded and certified by PCGS, adds up to just 280,000 of each grade. That means the entire population in MS63 condition would cost less than $380 million... and in MS64 condition $452 million... totaling less than a billion dollars.

In contrast to the multi-trillion dollar gold market that exists today, these gold coins legitimately amount to a drop in the bucket. Literally, if less than 900 investors each decided to take a $1,000,000 position in choice uncirculated Saint Gaudens gold coins, the prices could skyrocket as supplies vanish.

The entire PCGS population of graded and certified Gem Uncirculated MS65 coins, at today's pricing of $1,980 each would cost a gold buyer just $265 million.

- There are single oil paintings that would sell at auction for $265 million.
- A single Boeing 747-8 costs $357 Million, owned by a score of billionaires around the world.

There may not be a better time to own these magnificent coins. They are currently trading near 10-year lows in regards to premiums over their melt value. This doesn't even include the cost of the coins being certified for authenticity by the fiercely independent PCGS.

10 Year Premium Analysis for $20 Saint Gaudens

Grade	Today's Premium Over Melt	10 Year Low	10 Year High	10 Year Average
MS63	12%	10%	68%	45%
MS64	30%	28%	102%	69%
MS65	60%	55%	270%	150%

Based on 2/16/17 and a spot price of $1,239.00

Finally!

These $20 Saint Gaudens Gold Coins Trade for a Tiny Premium Over Jewelry Quality for Rarity and Investment Quality!

Junk $20 Saint Gaudens coins with a hole, scratches, dents or that have been heavily polished or cleaned that are used for pendants by jewelers are sold between dealers wholesale at $1,230 a coin!

In a nutshell, collector-quality MS63 PCGS-graded coins currently cost just 13% more than damaged coins. It's bullion with muscle at a tiny premium!

Call Monaco Rare Coins Immediately to Add Some of These Saint Gaudens $20 Gold Coins into Your Investment Portfolio.

800-997-8529

We can also help you put Gold, Silver and Platinum in your IRA!

ACCREDITED BUSINESS
MONACO RARE COINS

A+
BBB ACCREDITED SINCE 04/15/2010

This Monaco Rare Coins Special Report is dedicated to educating investors about opportunities in precious metals and rare coins. Unless otherwise stated, all charts, graphs, forecasts and indices published in this Special Report are developed by the employees and independent consultants employed by Monaco Rare Coins. The accuracy of the data used is believed reliable but is not guaranteed. There's no assurance that the past performance of any rare coin or precious metal will be repeated in the future, or that any forecasts or recommendations in this newsletter will occur. The owners and employees of Monaco Rare Coins may hold positions in the bullion and rare coins discussed in this Special Report. Neither Monaco Rare Coins nor its owners or employees are registered investment advisers and do not purport to offer personalized investment-related advice. Neither Monaco Rare Coins nor its owners or employees determine the suitability of the views and recommendations contained herein for any reader. Each person must individually determine whether such views and recommendations are suitable for and whether they fit within such person's goals and portfolio. Monaco Rare Coins is a dealer in rare coins and precious metals.

www.MonacoRareCoins.com
(800) 997-8529